THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 10.

A FAMOUS CLIPPER.—The Dreadnaught, the most famous of American clippers, was built in 1853. On her first return voyage from Liverpool, in February, 1854, she beat the Cunard steamship Canada. She rapidly increased her celebrity in the voyages that followed, in 1859 making the 3,400 miles from Sandy Hook to Liverpool in 13 days and 8 hours. In the year following she made a record that was never equalled, before or since, by a sailing vessel, going from Sandy Hook to Queenstown, 2,760 miles, in 9 days and 17 hours. For a long time this trip was the only topic in sailing circles. It was only a few years ago that Captain Samuel's phenomenal pluck and vigilance were typically exemplified, though he simply explained it in this wise: "My success, under God's Providence, I attributed to discipline, and to forcing the ship at night as well as during the day." It was in the time of the Dreadnaught, in 1862, that Captain Samuel's ship was struck by a sea that broke his left leg and would have carried him overboard but for his timely seizure by two sailors. As he lay in the cabin the news was brought him that the rudder had been carried away. The ship lay for three days in the trough of the sea, while the sailors, under the disabled commander's orders, were constructing a new rudder. This was done in setting it, and then all efforts to turn the ship's head southward by means of drags having been found useless, the Captain furled all the head sails and set all the square sails on the mainmast and the whole of the mainmast and three sharp back every sail that was set. By keeping the sails trimmed flat back, the ship was pulled backward for 250 miles toward the nearest harbor, Fyfe. By the time the port was reached, the second rudder was shipped, and they anchored safely. Capt. Samuel's men were selected to sail the yacht Dauntless in her transatlantic race with the Coronet next Monday.
